1. Local homeless service and shelter nonprofits, businesses, civic groups, government agencies, and houses of worship are joining forces to find and talk with our most vulnerable Fairfax County homeless individuals; and secure permanent housing and needed physical and psychological supports for each. Due to the fragility of their health, this most vulnerable homeless population are at a higher risk of dying on our streets. This private/public local initiative is part of the national 100K Homes Campaign which now includes the neighboring jurisdictions of Arlington County and Washington DC.
 2. In February, initiative volunteers will fan out into the Fairfax County community to locate, identify and interview our community's most vulnerable homeless individuals.
 3. Beginning now, permanent housing and resources for permanent housing and support are being secured for those most vulnerable homeless people identified.
 4. In March (about the same time the annual Hypothermia Prevention Shelter program ends) the most vulnerable homeless individuals will be match with permanent housing and supports.
